Grain Storage

An excellent bulletin, entitled "Storing Grain on the Farm," has been issued by the Manitoba Department of Agriculture and Immigration, Winnipeg. Several types of temporary and permanent structures are described and illustrated, together with details on construction. There are few, if any, farmers to whom this bulletin will not be of use. More

Circular No. 34, distributed by the Agricultural Extension Service, Department of Agriculture, Edmonton, also contains a number of useful suggestions, "particularly respecting

It is unwise to leave grain on the field in unprotected piles. It can be protected at very small cost by methods described in the two above-mentioned publications.

For special problems, information can be obtained from Departments of Agricultural Engineering at the Universities of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba (Edmonton, Saskatoon and Winnipeg, respectively).

Japanese Wheat Farming

Japanese farmers grow wheat as cash crops, the proceeds against themselves.

On the crop, the money received is usually being used principally to make payment for the fertilizer, so necessary to Japanese farms, which is generally bought on credit. Farm rent has to be paid for the cultivation of rice, but this is not the case in the tillage of wheat, the whole wheat crop belonging to the farmer. The Japanese wheat harvest usually ends about the beginning of July, and

Two new cases of infantile paralysis brought the Alberta provincial total up to forty-five last week.

Best Free Country

Herbert Hoover from "Island Story" and "May the Angels"

The oldest free country in the world, Switzerland, celebrates to-day the hundredth anniversary of the recovery of the nation to freedom. The simple, honest, to-day the farmers and townsmen are as fresh and understanding as they were then. The King of the Romans, Frederick III. and Schwyz (the fathers) gave the whole country down from this lake, to the Alps, to a student of the University of Zurich, with its seat in Gerny, but they were unwilling to let the country go to the Art House of Hapsburg.

They formed their first confederation in 1291, and since then they seem they may have desired local self-government. The important clause in the agreement was that the Swiss should be the law of the Grail on the Lake Geneva was that "they do not want to be ruled by a foreigner who gains his office by force or by, or who is not an inhabitant of the valleys or a number of men of the country, but a foreigner would have no power and no their troubles were not over. As defederation spread they had dissensions and external animosities. The French and as Napoleon's enemies did they got into more trouble. A free press was not to be had, speaking four languages. The man man of Berchingsdorf, who was a member of the committee charge did, can probably take it if he wishes. But history may not keep them. Presdon is a man of letters, a member of the free organization of Europe, will not down or mislead this. He is a man of letters, will burn, too, in other valleys on the plains.—New York Times

"That's the matter! Barnette was a coward!"

"For 27 years I have practiced 14 a day," the violinist replied.

"Now the critics say my playing ended. But to what do they base my musicianism?" He drew his arms in a gesture of despair.

"They say I'm a genius!"

The Shaming Example

"You may be a genius," in London recently George Bernard Shaw, peddler, was fined for driving a white trunk. Bernard Shaw, the playwright, was undisturbed by the incident. He said, "I'm not a most unusual thing in London. I'm a very ordinary thing, possibly live up to in talent."

His Great Handicap

You make men love their government and country by giving them the opportunity of having the kind of government that inspires respect and says a Harvard professor in light of this it is no wonder that the defunct, corrupt governing countries be irredeemable
